The Forbidden City.

The well-known explorer of Tibet, Mr. W. W. Rockhill, has returned home to this country. The news will surprise many geographers, whose latest information, received in December, was that in April last Mr. Rockhill was in northeastern Tibet, pushing his way toward Lhasa, the goal of his ambition. He hoped to be able to travel with a party of Mongols as far as Tengrinor, a lofty lake among the mountains north of Lhasa. The Mongols refused to go with him to Lhasa, as the Tibetans are still determined to keep all foreigners out of the holy city. He heard that the interdict now extends even to foreign goods, which are rigid-ly excluded from Tibet. He seems, therefore, again to have met the de-feat that for many years has overtaken all explorers bound for Lhasa.

Mr. Rockhill's first journey, with Lhasa as its goal, was undertaken Lhasa as its goal, was undertaken in 1889, when he hoped, by pushing rapidly along the main road from China to the capital, to attain the city. He had only fairly entered the country when his troubles with the Tibetan Lamas began. At one place the people were forbidden to buy anything from him, to sell him anything, or to serve as guides. Along the road he camped away from all villages and Lamaseries, trusting himself only with the black tent people, who were extremely kind. At another place the Lamas wished to turn him and his party out of the town before he had fairly entered it. If he had been dressal is Eugeness as turns he would un ed in European costume he would undoubtedly have been turned back much earlier on his journey, but he wore Tibetan dress, spoke nothing but Chinese and Tibetan, and during the en tire journey never used any European articles of dress or food. He lived as the people did on samba and tea. He was compelled at last to turn back, and made his way down the Yangee river to the coast Since Fathers Huc and Gabet visite I Lhasa in 1846 no white man has set foot in this famous centre of Buddhism. The city was the goal of Prejevalsky's ambition, but he was turned back on three of his expeditions while still far from the forbidden gates. On one occasion the authorities in Lhasa threat ened him with violence; again the failure of his supplies compelled him to retreat; and on the third expedition he was attacked by the Tibetans, who resented his intrusion upon their soil.

Mr. Carey, the explorer, also tried in vain to reach Lhasa. The explorer Bonvolot in 1890 reached Lake Tengrinor, only about two days' journey on horseback from the capital. Here was met by the authorities of Lhasa, who would not permit him to approach tried in vain! to reach the mysterious

We should be entirely ignorant of what has been going on in the sacred city for many years if the Indian gov-ernment had not from time to sent na-tive Indians to travel in Tibet. Some of them have made long sojourns in FINE GROUND RAW BONE (warranted ricelly pure).
